Aging with HIV At the start of the epidemic more than 30 years ago, people who were diagnosed with HIV or AIDS could expect to live only 1-2 years after that diagnosis. This meant that the issues of aging were not a major focus for people with HIV disease. Now that effective treatment for HIV is available, it is considered to be a long-term condition and many people are living long and healthy lives with HIV. As we grow older, we are more likely to experience other health conditions. Living with HIV presents certain challenges, no matter what your age. But older people with HIV may face different issues than their younger counterparts, including greater social isolation and loneliness. Stigma is also a particular concern among older people with HIV. Stigma negatively affects people's quality of life, self-image, and behaviors, and may prevent them disclosing their HIV status or seeking HIV care. This workshop will explore issues of aging with HIV and how we can be prepared to help those we work with that are impacted by this disease.

Speakers

Dr. James Carter is an Assistant Professor Social Work and Gerontology at Wright State University. His teaching at the undergraduate and graduate level emphasizes the need for better understandings of the positive aspects of aging and supporting a healthy sexuality throughout the lifespan with a particular emphasis on the aging population living in assisted living settings. Dr. Carter received his M.P.H. from The Ohio State University College of Public Health and Ph.D. from The Ohio State University College of Social Work.

Katherine "Kate" Shumate, M.P.H. has worked in HIV for 30 years in a variety of roles in both HIV prevention and care. She has taught three HIV-related courses in the Social Work Department at The Ohio State University on main and branch campuses and is now responsible for training in the HIV Care, Prevention, and Surveillance Section at the Ohio Department of Health. Kate received her Masters Degree in Public Health through the College of Medicine and Public Health at The Ohio State University.
